ABOUT THE THEME

There is an age-old dilemma among the academicians across the globe that how best to teach, which is nothing but about how best to learn. In order to produce the inspired and charged job ready students, today colleges/universities need to rethink their teaching pedagogy and the learning process along-with the curricula, while retaining their distinctive methods and traditions.

This one-day workshop is aimed at helping college/university faculty members to develop the essential competencies for improving their impact on the students through effective learning and teaching, within the context of their institutional frameworks. Participants of this program will be trained in the art and science of effective teaching and classroom management, mainly by using powerful student-centered, active-learning approaches to teaching to provide an enriching learning experience for students.

Specifically, this program is aimed at the following:

- A deeper understanding of the 'best' practices in learning and teaching in higher education
- Increased confidence through reflection and discussion of real issues and challenges
- Learning through reflection, discussion and practice.
- Understanding of learning styles of young adults
- Incorporate participant-centered learning into traditional teaching methods
- Gain strategies for teaching the case method
- Adopt innovative teaching tools and techniques
- Connect with students more effectively
